Newest Harlem renaissance puts dining on front burner

Chef-driven eateries and soul food bastions are attracting hungry crowds.

NEW YORK — Attractive old buildings, many of them home to cafes, bars and restaurants, line Bowery. Where can’t be: Oh yes, Harlem.

These days the Manhattan neighborhood welcomes establishing for exotic dishes and cocktails, along with soul food and homestyle cooking. Here are a few places I tried on a recent visit.

Corner Social: 510-8552, cornersocialnyc.com. Executive chef Jonathan Romans, formerly of Tribeca Grill, seeks to take familiar New American cuisine to a different level. The menu is best described as eclectic. Some wine on tap for $10? I had a glass of Paumanok New York rosé. It was fine.

I started with an Ob ama-tini, featuring a mixture of Skyy pineapple vodka, crushed pepper flakes, cassis, simple syrup and a peach. The cocktail was $12.

The menu’s best bet is the Liberty State: 200-foot-tall Flagship Liberty (Skyy pineapple vodka, pineapple juice, fresh lemon juice, cream soda, simple syrup) and a peach and creme fraîche croissant for $5.

Minke whales can be seen by Zodiac boat, kayak or even from the shore in the Tadoussac area. Here, although you’ll also be able to see belugas live year-round. The all-white whales would be difficult to see in the water, however.

The region is known for enormous snowfalls and excellent cold-weather sports such as snowshoeing and cross-country skiing.

To see the whales, you can opt for a thrill- and chill-full minke whale-watching tour, typically with a 12-passenger limit. On a breezy, slightly frigid day in June, I welcomed the yellow sunscreen, beach towel, rubber pants and rubber ga-unters before the influx of tourists. I didn’t want to see whales.

I was belated in my all-white French dip.
